John C. Hampsey

John C. Hampsey graduated from South Hills Catholic in 1972. He is a Professor of British Romanticism and Classical Greece at Cal Poly, San Luis Obispo.

His memoir, Kaufman’s Hill (Macy’s at South Hills Village), is set in Pittsburgh from 1961-68, narrates the “evolution” of the boyhood of the author from age 7 to 14.

He is also the author of Paranoia and Contentment--a Personal Essay on Western Thought (2005, University of Virginia Press), a book that turns upside down our standard thinking about creativity, imagination, and what it is to be wholly human,” the first book to view paranoia in a positive light and to use the concept to re-examine Western thought.

He has also published over thirty-five essays and stories and is about to release Soda Lake, a nearly-completed autobiography mixed with existential mystery and fantasy.

Copies of Kaufman’s Hill will be available for purchase and signing.
